Excerpt: . . . thought I should have had either spirits or steadiness of fingers to write when I began. Your paternally affectionate, S. RICHARDSON. Pray be so good, when you favour me, to leave a margin at sides, top, and bottom: --I am fond of preserving what you write. TO TO MISS MULSO London, July 27, 1751-. caoss THING! C YOU cannot, you will not, give me a description of the rooms, in which you and your truly worthy friends mostly sit and converse, which I desired you to do, that I might imagine myself now and then among you!-- Come, and see them. Churl!--Yet, in another letter, tell me, that you are so happy, that you dread the coming in of visitors. Very well, Miss Mulso. But you might have gratified me in the requested description; because you could hardly expect that either my disorders or business would permit me to take such a journey. Could it be done, however, it would be inexpressibly delightful to me to honour myself with the cognition, shall I call it of my two new nieces. God bless them all three! 1 2. You You do Clarissa great honour. But I hope you'll get through the last volumes without hartshorn; yet you'll hardly have been able to find an hour to read them in, in which I have not a bottle of it in my hand. How could I be so wicked, as to mean, to provoke you, and make you saucy-Must...
