Not illustrated. 1845 Excerpt: . . . power to the Roman Catholic, the Jesuits had never risen to their present strength in this country, and where their secret activity is so little understood, and their presence amongst us, as ordinary members of the community, so little suspected, we hope, that in laying open the secret springs of their actions, by publishing in this form, their secret oath and instructions, those who value their civil and religious liberty, will be better prepared to detect and oppose their present stealthy machinations for the destruction of the British Constitution, both in Church and State. This society, for its perfidy and treason, was expelled from England in 1604, and, under the disguise of twelve gentlemen from Leige, escaping from the French Revolution, they succeeded in again establishing themselves (at Stonyhurst, in Lancashire, ) in 1795, from whence they have ever since been annually sending forth hundreds of students and members, filling situations in every grade of society--in the army, navy, Church and State--throughout the British dominions. We have seen that this order is not (as many suppose) ecclesiastical, but military; of undefined extent--perfect discipline and despotic sway--the members, all men of talent, are trained up in the body of iniquity of which their works are composed, and then dispersed, in every variety of occupation, throughout the world, to work incessantly for the overturning of every constituted authority, on the ruins of which to establish their own. It is obvious that none but men of intellect and talent...
